About this course

The NEBOSH International General Certificate (IGC) is one of the world's most recognised health and safety qualifications, providing learners with a comprehensive understanding of how to identify, assess and control common workplace risks in an international context. It focuses on practical health and safety management systems and is based on internationally recognised best practice, making it suitable for organisations operating anywhere in the world.

This NEBOSH International health and safety course helps organisations to:

- Improve health and safety performance while reducing workplace accidents, incidents and associated costs
- Understand how their activities create risks for employees, contractors, visitors and others across a range of industries and international workplaces
- Strengthen compliance with international health and safety standards and support continual improvement within their organisation
- Develop and maintain effective health and safety management systems that support client requirements, audits, international operations and business growth

The NEBOSH International General Certificate is assessed through a management of health and safety assessment and a practical workplace risk assessment, allowing learners to demonstrate how they can apply their knowledge to real workplace situations and improve health and safety performance within their organisation.

Who is the course for?

The NEBOSH International General Certificate (IGC) is designed for anyone with health and safety responsibilities working outside the UK or within international organisations. It is suitable for managers, supervisors, team leaders, health and safety representatives and those looking to begin or develop a career in occupational health and safety. The qualification is recognised worldwide and is relevant across construction, manufacturing, oil and gas, utilities, engineering and many other industries.

What you will learn

The qualification consists of two units. IG1 covers the management of health and safety, including risk management, health and safety culture, leadership, incident investigation and management systems. IG2 requires learners to complete a practical workplace risk assessment, applying their knowledge to identify hazards and recommend suitable control measures.

How the course is assessed

To achieve the NEBOSH International General Certificate (IGC), candidates must successfully complete and pass two separate assessments: IG1 and IG2.

Unit IG1 - Open Book Assessment

IG1 is assessed through an online Open Book Examination (OBE), which tests a learner's ability to apply health and safety knowledge to realistic workplace scenarios. The assessment focuses on understanding and applying international health and safety management principles rather than simply recalling information.

Unit IG2 - Practical Risk Assessment

IG2 is assessed by completing a practical workplace risk assessment based on the learner's own workplace or a suitable workplace if they are not currently employed. The completed assessment must be submitted within the timescale set by NEBOSH following the successful completion of the IG1 assessment.

To achieve the full NEBOSH International General Certificate, learners must successfully complete both IG1 and IG2 within five years of their registration date.

Further information about open book exams is available in the NEBOSH Learner Guide - OBE.

Entry requirements

There are no formal entry requirements for the NEBOSH International General Certificate. However, learners should:

Have a suitable standard of English.

NEBOSH recommends an English language level equivalent to IELTS 6.0 or higher. This helps ensure learners can understand course materials and complete the assessments effectively.

IELTS tests.

What you will get from the course

The course provides a practical understanding of international health and safety management, enabling learners to identify workplace hazards, assess risks and implement effective control measures. You'll gain the knowledge and confidence to improve health and safety performance, reduce accidents and support a positive safety culture within your organisation.
